[1] The four original 10 inch dolls were released on May 21, 2001 - Yasmin, Cloe, Jade and Sasha. The eyes were adorned with a shadow and lush glossy lips. [1] Bratz has achieved great success and the original doll line has been expanded with spin-offs including Bratz Kidz, Bratz Babyz and Bratzillaz, as well as media with various Bratz characters, including a web series, film adaptation, TV series, discography and video games. In 2005, global sales were two billion dollars and, in 2006, Bratz had about 40 percent of the fashion doll market. [1] Bratz Dolls has caused controversy in different areas. From the stylized proportions of dolls to fashionable garments, the brand has always followed closely the trends of pop culture. For years, MGA Entertainment has been involved in a long legal dispute with Mattel over Bratz design rights. In 2011, the dispute ended with MGA as Victor. [2] The related litigation is underway in a MGA cause related to theft of Mattel's commercial secrets, [3] The Bratz brand has taken some residues and has crossed some rebranding throughout its life. In early 2010, Bratz took a short itatola after Mattel's first cause and returned later.To commemorate the tenth anniversary of the franchise. In 2013, Bratz has changed to have a highest body and a logo and a new branding. [4]MGA Entertainment Made. Made. Decision to completely review Bratz brand throughout 2014, in an attempt to return the brand to its roots. As a result, none of the Bratz 2014 product line has been offered to North America retailers. In July 2015, Bratz made a return and set of new dolls were released, introducing a new main character called Raya to the formation of Cloe, Jade, Yasmin and Sasha and a new slogan and website design. The bodies were changed again from 10 "again, but with a new body and a mold each. These dolls were met with a negative fans reaction, since the brand was more oriented towards younger children rather than a Twine and adolescents like previous dolls. Due to poor welcome and sales, dolls were once again sustained by 2016. In the autumn of 2018, a new line of bambols called "Bratz Collector" were released exclusively on Amazon. The dolls have been designed by the fashion illustrator Hayden Williams, and branding in the foreground that is more closely resembled as the original stroke of dolls. In June 2021, for their 20th anniversary, Bratz released almost replicas of the dolls of the first edition of 2001. Products and history Bratz Dolls since 2010 Even though Bratz dolls went in a scarcely May 21, 2001 the debut - moreover due to the Monopoly for a long time by BarbieÀ € à,~ " Their popularity has increased the following Christmas. In their first five years, 125 million products were sold worldwide, [1] and, in 2005, global sales of br. Atz and Bratz products reached two billion dollars. [1] In 2006, a toy industry analyst indicated Bratz had captured about forty percent of the fashion doll market, compared to sixty percent of Barbie. [1] The competition was high with Barbies. À more and more popular over time. The original line of dolls has generated a number of spin-offs such as Lil 'Bratz, Bratz Boyz, Bratz Kidz, Bratz Babyz, Idrona Bítsy Bratz, Bratz Lil' Angelz, Be-Bratz and Bratz Petz, as well as films, Discography, video games and interactive DVDs. Set: Bratz Characters ListOf the four original dolls generated a quartet of dolls similar in 2002 and 2003. Set of twins were introduced. The dolls were sold separately and in theme environments. Accessories such as playsets, furniture and cars are also available. Two Bratz Boyz were released in 2002 with the others who debut in 2003, in 2007 and 2008. Bratz also includes Bratz Boyz and Boyz Twiinz. Lil 'Bratz (2002) are miniature versions of the original Five Bratz and finally included Lil' Boyz based on Bratz Boyz. In 2007, a clothing line was released called Lil 'Bratz Couture. Main article: Bratz Babyz Bratz Babyz debuted August 22, 2004, with accessories for newborns like bottles and blankets. The characters of the regular Bratz line were released as Babyz. Bratz Lil 'Angelz (2007) is the newborn version, from Bratz Babyz collection. Smaller than normal Bratz Babyz, include their newly born domestic animals. Bratz Petz debuted in 2004 and was interrupted in 2006. They were plush toys that resemble foxes, cats and dogs with their bags, clothes and accessories. Bratz Petz was re-issued in Australia and U.K. With bobble heads and accessories. Main article: Bratz Kidz Bratz Kidz, the equivalent "child" of teenage dolls Bratz, were introduced in 2006. The dolls were high 6 "and, so he was the courtyard of the Bratz regulation. Bratz Boyz Kidz is introduced in 2007 with four of The Bratz Boyz. Shortly after the release of Bratz Boyz Kidz, the clothing was changed from plastic snap-on fabrics. Be-Bratz Bamals (2007) were designed for the owner's customization. With a USB key Be -Bratz, the doll owner can take a Be-Bratz doll online, name it and create a social online home page. Games can be played with the Be-Bratz account to acquire doll accessories. In August 2010, for The tenth anniversary of the franchise, MGA released their first bratz dolls in a year. [5] In addition to two "return" collections, MGA also published 10 new female bratz characters in October 2010. Bratz Party and Talking Bratz were in Target, Toys "R" Us and Walmart stores.(dubious - discuss) [5] Main article: Bratzillaz (House of Witchez) In the fall of 2012, Bratzillaz was released as a spin-off line, depicting Bratz's 's enchanted cousins'. In 2013, Bratz got a new logo and a new slogan, and dolls all have new bodies with articulated arms, with a height to match their competitor Monster High maintaining their unique faces, and brand new sports fashions. Only Cloe, Yasmin, Jade, Sasha, Meygan, Fianna, Shira, Roxxi and Phoebe were made in the new bodies. In January 2014, it was revealed that Bratz would continue another hiatus (but only for the United States) for a whole year, in an attempt to rebuild the brand. This decision was taken due to the decrease in brand popularity after their previous hiatus in 2010, which caused the cause against Mattel. MAY The entertainment felt that it fell in Bratz's return in autumn 2010 to celebrate the tenth anniversary of the brand, and the company wanted to give Bratz the return he really deserved. Bratz returned in July 2015 with the introduction of Raya, a new character (despite sharing the same name with a previous character), to accompany the four main originals. The Bratz logo was also back to the original and a new slogan was adopted. Bratz was interrupted again in 2016 after a re-branding and unexecuted sales. Isaac Larian announced on May 20, 2017 that Bratz would return in autumn 2018, as well as announce a collaboration with designer Hayden Williams. From the 2018 Black Friday, the new Bratz Collector doll series designed by Hayden Williams were officially released, sold exclusively through Amazon. Controversity The parent group father and daughters were outraged by the release ofBratz Secret Date. Dolls have been packaged with a Bratz girl in the right half of the box—neither Cloe, Yasmin, Jade, Meygan, or Nevra—and paired with aBoyz doll behind the door to the left. A window showing the feet of the doll would provide a clue to which Boyz Bambola was, especially important in the search for a rare Bryce doll, available in only one of every 24 boxes. The Group complained that dolls sent a negative message, they said they were forcing girls to grow too soon and presumably promoting the idea of squealing out of the house to go to blind dates with complete strangers. They also took problems with accessories that looked like champagne bottles and glasses; However, the accessories have been confirmed to be bottle of smoothies. They called MGA to remove dolls from the markets. MGA held fast, so the collection of the secret date was later renamed the blind date for the sale of continuation. On December 21, 2006, the National Labor Committee announced that factory workers behind Bratz Dolls in China worked for 94 hours a week, while the factory paid only $0.515 per hour. The cost of doll work was $0.7. The retail price for a single doll varies between $9.99 to $22.99, depending on the items included and the specific retailer. [6] The charges in the report describe the practices assigned to the BBC, expressed the opinion that the report was a "trash cluster" and that the overtime required that exceeds the maximum legal value of 36 hours a month, forcing workers to stay at work to meet the strict production quotas and the denial of paid leave and other benefits. [7] The report shows copies of what it claims is "cheat sheets" distributed to workers before the accounts by Walmart or other customers arrived to ensure that the factory passes to inspections intended to ensure that the supplier meets the working standards. These factory operatorsIn January 2007 to protest the plans for factory managers to put all employees on temporary contracts, denying them the legal protection required for long-term employees. [6] After the announcement, the CEO of MGA Entertainment, Isaac Larian sent a statement up 24, 2006, via e-mail to a fan site of the doll line, bratz world, [8] and two more days after a playthings magazine stating that the information is false and the company does not have familiarity with the company appointed in the report and mga uses top-order factories in "the orient" to realize its assets, in addition to tassel and hasbro. Larian said that he never heard of the news or "the organization behind this negative and false campaign immediately before the last weekend of holiday shopping." [9] In 2007, it concerns the image of the body and lifestyle bratz dolls promote were raised by the American psychological association after establishing their "task force on girls sexualization." in their allegedly published report, they cited concern for adult sexuality, they were criticized for an apparent lack of support of evidence and data. [10] bratz were not the only dolls to criticize in this report, [11] which highlighted not only toys but also other products and the wider media. [11] in the united kingdom, a bratz spokesman defended the toy line by stating that bratz is purchased from over eight, and are aimed at the preteen and the teen market, the dolls were considered for women from 10 to 18 years, [12] with the focus on dolls while on the looks was not on sexualization and that friendship was also a key goal of the dolls of bratz. [12] the brand bratz, which remained number one in the market of the united kingdom for 23 consecutive months focuses the fundamental values on friendship, totembo hair and a "passion for fashion only".Nic. [12] Isaac Larian, in comments assigned to the BBC, expressed the opinion that the report was a "trash cluster" and that the people who wrote were irresponsible. [13] Legal issues Bratz Bratz rangeDolls influenced the sale of Mattel's leading fashion doll, Barbie. In 2004, sales figures showed that Bratz Dolls Outsold Barbie Dolls in the UK, although Mattel claimed that in terms of number of dolls, clothes and accessories sold, Barbie remained the leading brand. [14] In 2005, the figures showed that Barbie doll sales had dropped by 30% in the United States, and by 18% worldwide, with much of the fall attributed to the popularity of Bratz dolls. [15] In April 2005, MGA Entertainment filed a lawsuit against Mattel, claiming that the line "my scene" of Barbie's dolls had copied the look from the eyes of the DOE of Bratz dolls. [16] They even added the word "only" to the slogan of the toy line "the only girls with a passion for fashion" trying to isolate their dolls from Mattel, since many occasional consumers have confused the difference of two brands. Mattel sued MGA Entertainment for $500 million, concerning that Bratz Creator Carter Bryant was working for Mattel when he developed the idea for Bratz. [17] On July 17, 2008, a federal jury ruled that Bryant had created Bratz while working for Mattel, despite MGA's claim that Bryant had not been employed by Mattel at the time and Bryant's claim that he had designed Bratz between two separate periods of work at Mattel. The jury also ruled that MGA and its CEO Isaac Larian were responsible for converting Mattel's property for their use and intentionally interfere with the contractual duties due to Bryant to Mattel. [18] On August 26, the jury decided that Mattel had to be paid only $100 million damage, citing that only the first generation of Bratz had violated Mattel's property and that MGA had innovated and evolved the product quite in a wayThat subsequent generations of Bratz could not be considered conclusively to violate. On 3 December 2008, the Judge of the U.S. District, Stephen G. Larson granted a permanent injunction by Mattel against MGA. [19] [19] On 10 December 2009, the US Court of Appeal for the ninth circuit granted MGA an immediate stay of injunction, thus stopping the imminent call of all Bratz products, guaranteeing that retailers could continue to sell the product Bratz produced by MGA at least the final judgment of the Court on the issue. In their initial declaration, the Court suggested the previous judgment of Larson was "Draconian" and was too far away to reward the property of the entire Bratz franchise in Mattel. The appeal court also ordered MGA and Mattel to solve their out-of-court controversy. [20] In a statement by MGA, the states of Isaac Larian states that "the Court's stay is good news for all Bratz fans and for those who take care of equitable competition." [21] On 22 July 2010, the ninth court of the appeal declared that property of Bratz's franchise belonged to MGA Entertainment. The Court of Appeal rejected the original judgment of the District Court for Mattel, where MGA Entertainment was condemned to give up the entire Bratz brand "including all copyrights and registered trademarks of BratzÀ € à,~" in Mattel. The group of the court of appeal said that Judge Larson abused his discretion with his judgment of Mattel, concluding that the Bryant employment contract could have, but is not necessarily, to cover ideas as he designed, processes, programs For computers and formulas, which are all the concrete [22] [23] In addition to the dispute for the property and control of the Bratz property, on October 20, 2009, Bernard Artist "Butch" Belair presented a new cause of violation of design against Mattel and MGA in the Federal Court of Manhattan, looking for unspecified damage. Belair stated that her copyright designs of young women with "big heads, oval eyes, small bodies and big that he had created for the Designer of Shoes House Steve Madden, they were "plugged" when Carter Bryant, during his testimony of the Court of 2008, testified that he was inspired by Steve Madden's shoes ads who saw in seventeen years Belair says that NA © MGA NA © Mattel "sseeked or obtained permission ... To copy, reproduce, create derivabiall works or distribute" his work "protected by copyright". [24] In 2011, MGA prevailed on Belair. The Judge Shira Schindlin, of the United States District Court for the South District of New York, declared in a summary judgment issued Wednesday, "Belair cannot monopolize the abstract concept of an absurdly big, long, attractive, fashionable woman. [25] Mattel Inc. and MGA Entertainment Inc. They returned to court on 18 January 2011 to renew their battle on those who own Bratz, which this time includes accusations from both companies that the other side has stolen commercial secrets. [26] On April 21, 2011, a federal jury returned a verdict that supports MGA. [27] On August 5, 2011, Mattel was also sentenced to pay MGA $ 310 million for lawyers commissions, stealing trade secrets and false statements rother than 88.5 million dollars released in April. [28] In July 2012, MGA Entertainment sued Lady Gaga for $ 10 million for causing, according to the BBC, "deliberate" delays to release a doll based on her image of her." [29] The ninth circuit has left without prejudice to the judgment of $ 170 million since 2008 against Mattel on procedural reasons in January 2013. On January 13, 2014, MGA presented a complaint in the California Court of State, looking for over $ 1 billion. This case is currently pending.
